The beginning of the '70's found George Mason's horizons expanding. Student Life was the aspect of the school most radically affected by the changes. Student involvement in activities became as diverse as the offerings. Involvement was not necessarily confined to school as students acknowledged the influence of world events by developing priorities in their obligations to themselves and others. The six classes devised new methods of approaching class projects, sponsored activities and formal dances.

To reflect these changes, Mustang '70 is an experiment in organization. For the first time the Theme, Sports and Features sections have been combined chronologically to emphasize student oriented activities.

Blueprints which were once considered impossible became realities. The addition of the classroom-auditorium complex provided career opportunities along with facilities for dramatics, musical productions and class use. Separate Junior and Senior high assemblies were feasible without the heat and dirty tarps of the gym.

The new Student Activities Office provided the SCA with a student work center. Together students and faculty encountered the curriculum and activities with a new perspective. The new wing dedication, Carnival '69, the revised Dress Code, the Student Conduct Code, and the Experiment in Free Form Education (EFFE) resulted from a concentrated effort to co-ordinate the committee work of the students, faculty and community.

The first innovation was Carnival '69.

Carnival '69

Everybody loves a carnival, and, what is more important, everybody spends money at a carnival. The SCA learned all this to its great pleasure and profit as it sponsored its first carnival on October 11.

Carnival '69, designed as the major money-making project for the clubs that would otherwise compete for funds throughout the year, was a success for all concerned. Particularly elated was the Junior Class whose four booths netted over $400.

The Carnival's organization provided money for both the clubs and the sponsor SCA. Under the established system the clubs submitted budgets and were allowed to keep all their profits until their budgets were realized. Of money collected above the budget, the SCA appropriated 25 percent. Six clubs provided the SCA with income. Overall, profits fell just short of $2000.

Among the most popular of these activities were the Senior's dunk which saw members of the faculty deluged by eager students and the jail cheerfully presided over by the cheerleaders.

The mammoth crowds that covered the carnival grounds from morning to dusk included not only parents but other members of the community

Half-Time Highlight of Homecoming

Blessed with balmy weather, the court presentation at the Homecoming game climaxed a week of preparation.

The court moved into position with stately grace to the mellow voice of Harold Nicholas. In line with the theme, Days of Wine and Roses, each girl in the court appeared from the center of a rosebud of band members. The marching band provided a musical background for the ceremony as well as for the newly formed drill team routine.

Football Tri-Captains Jim Davis, Chuck Stickney and Jeff Hobson provided the manpower necessary for the traditional necklacing of the Queen, whose expression of obvious delight spoke for the whole court.

Despite the presence of a score of photographers a last minute film shortage almost disrupted half-time coverage.

Finally, the ceremony was over. The Football team returned, passing through a decorated hoop and the audience settled back to watch the last half of the disappointing loss to the Number One team in District, Gar Field.

The week preceding Homecoming was one that can only be described as hectic. Falling just after the Carnival, it was further complicated by the arrival of the October Viet-Nam Moritorium. Anti-war leaflets competed with dance advertisements and rising feelings about both issues filled the air with electricity.

Even more work than usual, remained undone as the week began and the race against time continued until the very afternoon of the dance. Released from Carnival concerns, the Seniors worked with a will to bring their plans to fruition. The results were well worth the effort.

But Seniors were not the only workers. The annual dummy contest brought a flood of dummies. The Pep Club, whose spirit chain entwined the halls in its coils, planned Spirit Week activities.

Homecoming Day saw a snake walk winding its way through the city and an anxious Homecoming-Chairman about to experience the fulfillment of much planning.

Dance Survives Informal Trend

Days of Wine and Roses, the only all-school formal dance this year, was the beautiful result of much effort coordinated and urged by Claudia Dewhurst and Peter Colonna.

Held in the Team Teaching Room after a hard fight, the dance was confronted with the usual problem of decoration. This year it was superbly solved. Thousands of multi-colored tissue-paper flowers provided a lovely frame for an even lovelier court. Music, solid but not showy, was provided by the Yorkshires.

The arduous task is finding a seat at Days of Wine and Roses.

Awesome Offense Overshadowed

An abundance of speed, talent and drive from the backfield, and force, power and experience in the offensive line formed the backbone of the Mustangs' game plan. The addition of Pret Block at quarterback, Bruce Manley and John Wagner at running backs and the return of Wendell Byrd and Jeff Hobson as receivers turned this offense into a stunning tool of attack, implemented by the ability of the line-men. Although lacking in depth, the endurance and constant effort of Guards Mark Hamlin and Andy Schwind, Tackles Chuck Stickney and Bob Hobson made the offense the overwhelming machine it was. Recognized at the annual Fall Banquet for their outstanding contributions were Pret Block, who accumulated over 1700 yards of passing and rushing, "Most Valuable"; Andy Schwind, "Most Improved"; and Bill Marsh, "Most Team Spirited."

The lack of experienced defensive ball players forced many members of the offense to play both ways. Coach Jack Gambill did a marvelous job, manipulating the players he had to work with. This coupled with frequent injuries caused the defense to lose much of its sting from past years. While the players were still fresh, the defense resembled last year's powerhouse. Gapping holes in the defensive wall would have been total disaster were it not for the valiant efforts of returning players Chuck Stickney, Wendell Byrd, Jeff Hobson, Jim Davis and Mike Lacy and the new faces on the defense such as Mark Hamlin, Andy Schwind and John Wagner.

Cuts usually are not a worry for potential JV Football players, but this year Coach Mark Benson got such a large turnout that he was forced to limit the numbers on the team.

Unfortunately quantity does not always indicate victory; the team suffered from acute inexperience and a lack of physical size, playing teams which drew primarily their Freshmen and Sophomores from a larger pool. By the end of the season, some JV players moved up to varsity to fill in for injured players.

Sophomore Scott Bradley and Freshman Petie Mattson starred on offense and defense respectively.

Soccer Record Best

Coach Charles Harold's Soccer Team nearly captured a championship, while starting eleven men most of whom were seniors. Due to a late season loss to Washington-Lee, the Varsity placed second in the Northern Virginia Soccer League, behind Yorktown.

Even so, the team had the best overall record in Northern Virginia. Many individuals received awards for excellence. Captain Andy DuPont, Vice-Captain Jeff Lundy and Junior Zeyad Sarsour were selected to the NVSL All-Star Team. DuPont, capping a brilliant high school career was named the Outstanding Defensive Player in the Metropolitan area.

While losing so many starters could be a major obstacle next year, Coach Harold had no reason to be in the doldrums. An undefeated JV squad will surely replenish the ranks.

Going Rough Across Country

With only two seniors out for the Cross Country Team, Coach Tom Carey had a difficult time winning meets this year.

Most Valuable Runner Kim Champion and Chris Boswell were the only upper-classmen participating in the sport this season, so losses can be chalked up to inexperience. However, the team did defeat Osbourn in a meet held at the historically famous Manassas Battlefield, during a rainstorm proving that they were men for all seasons.

Returning next year with their hard earned knowledge, Ed Collins, Paul Karnis, and Jim Powell form a strong nucleus for the long distance squad.

"Hobbit" Habit Addicts Audience

The outlook for the Hobbit and his dwarf companions appears dim.

The Hobbit, a fantasy in three acts, opened as the premier attraction at the new auditorium. The combined Junior-Senior High effort produced the first children's play in two years. Children from the elementary schools were bussed during the week to three individual performances. On Friday night the performance was opened up to the public, and the rear of the auditorium had to be opened to accommodate the crowd.

Sets for the production were constructed by the stagecraft class and included a marvelously simulated jail and cave. The large cast size provided a good opportunity for young actors to get a start in the theatre and many took advantage of it.

The play, The Hobbit, was adapted from a famous fantasy by J.R.R. Tolkien. Its amazing adventures and outlandish characters provided enjoyment and entertainment for both young and old.

"Imaginary Invalid"

Moliere's Imaginary Invalid, the major dramatic production of the year, represented a continuation of the "Classic" tradition begun with last year's Everyman. It was a success despite a Friday the 13th opening and a Saturday blizzard.

One of the major problems with production was the need to reproduce a piece of 17th century France on stage. Its achievement was made easier by the authentic drawing room set constructed and reconstructed by the stage craft class. Other problems included a break-away bed and an invalid who actually was sick during the week before production. Perhaps the biggest drawback was the difficulty in establishing an air of farce. But the cast finally caught fire and even this obstacle was surmountable.

Talent in Extended Show

The Junior Class surprised the entire school, even themselves with the production of the Variety Show, Coconut Grove.

With $650 worth of advanced tickets sold, and an auditorium filled to the aisles, the Juniors topped financial records of all previous years.

Tryouts began following Christmas Vacation. There were so many acts that it was necessary to cut. Even then the acts lasted longer than the allotted time so that second cuts were required. Still the show ran over two hours.

The Juniors were the first class to have the auditorium for the Variety Show. The sound and lighting systems far surpassed any possible in the gym, enhancing many of the acts with technical attributes, such as slides, black lights and sound systems. Sometimes it was clear that the equipment was unfamiliar to its operators.

Individual talent was the Show's most outstanding feature. Dance interpretations by Anne Davis and Patricia Jones; songs by Lynn Grove, Patti Singleton, and Anna Earman; and classical guitar by Mike Davis emphasized student abilities. One of the most memorable individual acts was Craig Medak's recitation of two macabre poems. Yuki and Danilo, the foreign exchange students, impressed everyone with English, Spanish, and Japanese renditions of Sounds of Silence.

Faculty acts emerged again after an absence of several years. Mrs. Butterfield and Mr. Brouillette as Gladys and Tyrone entertained with their park bench antics. Three couples in the faculty dance exhibited fine form as they emulated Katherine and Arthur Murray.

Pulled together at the last minute by Glenn Harcourt as Master of Ceremonies the show contained more dancing than in previous years which combined with vocal numbers to produce a well-balanced and financially successful show.

The Drama Department is quite a travelling organization. After trips to Middle Earth and 17th Century France, it was off again this time to Russia for "Gamblers" by Nikolai Gogol. The production of Gamblers was frenzied at best, coming on the heels of "The Imaginary Invalid." The experienced cast made the work somewhat easier, but there were still problems. After barely two weeks of rehearsal, the players took to the stage to present the play to the discerning eye of Mrs. Withers' EFFE Russian Lit class. Next appearance of the play was the District One-Act Festival, held at GM in March, where the play was rated excellent. The final curtain fell on "Gamblers" after two performances at the school one act festival in April.

Previews Gogol's "Gamblers"

Among the SCA's boldest projects this year was a foray into the realm of student-planned and run curriculum. This effort, dubbed EFFE (Experiment in Free Form Education), saw a student committee chaired by Sheila Jones, assume control of the curriculum for a three day period in March. The committee planned a sequence of over 100 courses based on the response to a survey administered to students and faculty. Teachers were recruited from the faculty, student body and sources outside the school. Courses covered an amazing array of topics ranging from transcendental meditation to quantum physics and touched on a wealth of subjects not usually appearing in high schools. Students registered for courses but were not required to attend, although responsibility of choice was stressed by the committee to the student body. Courses were open to community residents as well as students and faculty.

Initial response to the program was extremely favorable, at least from the students. They seemed to welcome the change from the usual routine and the chance to explore topics of their own choosing. Long range effect is more difficult to evaluate. How students would react to such a system as routine instead of change is a question still unanswered.

During a hectic work session, EFFE Committee members assemble the course handbook.

Students in Grades 9-12 got a taste of college registration lines, while waiting sometimes an hour to register for EFFE classes.

The Ides of March were celebrated with a full weekend of activities in mid-March.

The weekend began with the traditional Friday night Junior-Senior and Faculty-Key Club Basketball games. Following almost two months of sporadic practices the Junior-Senior girls attempted to provide entertainment for the sparse crowd. Both teams had developed game plans but under the leadership of Monica Ingley and Connie Rackowski, the "Gulch Trodders" (Juniors) were able to consistently out score the Seniors, compiling a 21-19 victory.

The Key Clubbers were no competition for the experienced Faculty. Led by the game's high scorer, Mr. Alan Kreuger with 30 points, the Faculty had no trouble securing a 70-32 win. Valiant Key Club attempts were made by Jeff Smith, Wayne Coates and Kenny Fautuex, high Key Club scorer with 14 points, but to no avail.

The weekend ended with an untraditional event. After many months of unsure planning by the Sophomores the Sweetheart Dance appeared as the Ides of March sockhop, but with the traditional court. This court, a much discussed feature, had been finally incorporated into the dance following a 9th-12th grade survey.

Sophomores spent much of the day decorating in the true Roman fashion with murals and columns. The court was crowned with laurel wreaths.

The Varsity Basketball team underwent the third consecutive head-coaching change in as many years. Heartbreaking one and two point losses were scattered throughout the season, while team performances vacillated between professional teamwork or undisciplined showmanship. Overall, it was a disappointing season considering the teams experience and potential, with five out of seven of last year's 14-7 season starters returning.

Highlights of the season included some fantastic individual performance by Pret Block, who scored 37 points during the District Tournament breaking George Mason's record for high scorer; and Wendell Byrd, who racked-up 29 points against Gar-Field and was nominated to the Post District I-B All-Star Team, and the Coaches' All-District Team. Scott Cline came out mid-season and added an extra boost. None the less the Mustangs finished fourth in the Monument District.

Davis State Champ Team Finishes Eighth

Two points for Kim Champion, a victory for George Mason.

The Wrestling Team overcame almost insurmountable barriers, showing self-determination and team effort. Coach Alan Kreuger, with no previous wrestling experience, guided both veteran and novice wrestlers through a successful season.

George Mason placed fourth in the District Tourney, led by Davis and Kim Champion, District Champions at the 155 pound and 107 pound weight class, respectively.

At the all-important fifteen team Regional Tournament the Mustang Matmen earned five berths to state. Jim and Kim, with their second championships of the year, paced the team to fifth place. Ronnie Lodico placed second in the 130 pound class. Kelly Champion, wrestling in what was termed the toughest weight class, defeated the 123 pound state champion and placed second. Billy Martin earned the trip to state by placing fifth in the 115 pound class.

The Mustangs placed eighth in the State Tournament and once again it was Kim Champion, with a second place in his weight class and Jim Davis winning the first State Championship in the history of GM Wrestling.

Injury prone Bob Hobson demonstrates potential.

Strong pins earned Billy Martin a trip to State.

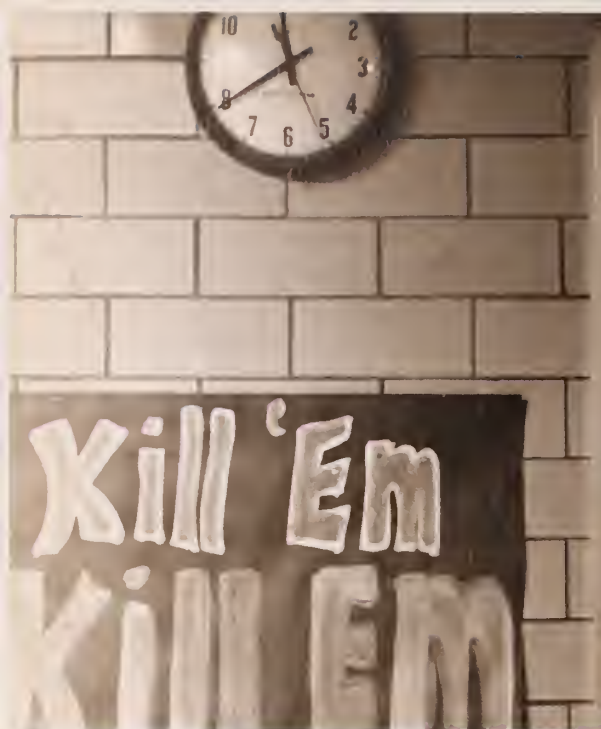

Ronnie Lodico's hustle and desire achieved a Second Place in the Regional Tournament.

In Retrospect, the conclusion of one decade and the onset of another marked a shift in attitude and interests of the nation, echoed at George Mason.

Students became more aware of metropolitan Washington and, more importantly, acknowledged this with participation in city, therefore national, events. Moratorium observances in October, November and December received suburban support from numerous high school and college students, many of whom were just beginning to sense involvement. Students found it necessary to develop priorities when active support of the Moratorium exercises denoted an anti-war position while abstention implied hawkish approval of the establishment. Being part of the "Silent Majority" was not always sufficient.

Class discussions enabled students to form opinions on Vietnam, My Lai, draft reform and the "Chicago Seven." After-school forums and EFFF courses, expressing a variety of viewpoints, indicated student concern. Students were not discouraged from participation nor from displaying visible signs of personal philosophy in dress, arm bands and peace signs.

With much attention diverted from the institution, occasionally past traditional student priorities suffered. A by-product of the efficient new cafeteria system, paper refuse collected in the cafeteria and more noticeably, on the school grounds. Students charged each other with apathy towards sports, extra-curricular offerings and the curriculum. To stimulate interest attempts such as EFFF tried to effectively make the school atmosphere relevant to that of the college campus and career world.

The sum of the year's accomplishments reflected conscious individual decisions to develop personal interests. Many students gained more than before.

The change in perspective, from school as a self-contained unit to school as part of a wider experience, was neither abrupt nor did it involve the entire student body. It was a subtle, fluid motion.

Reading Skills Lab Augments

The English Department expanded its curriculum this year, filling the old book room with a variety of reading machines and skill materials. This Skills Lab was staffed by a full-time reading specialist, and a member of the English faculty, assigned each period on a rotating basis.

Conceived as an aid to individual students who needed to increase their skills in the language-arts area, the lab was well used. Students from all grades, including Seniors prepping for College Boards, were referred by their English teachers or utilized the lab on their own initiative during study halls. Several reading machines, SRA reading enrichment materials and skill test materials were available to students and/or their teachers for individual skills practice and development.

First quarter English classes were again composition for all students. Beginning second quarter grades 9-12 began the quarterly rotation of courses originated last year. Second quarter classes got off slowly though because of the backlog of undelivered paperback books. More than one teacher was forced to abandon course schedules until the fourth week of the quarter when most of the books had arrived.

TEMPO, LASSO Profit

This year the literary community attempted to tighten up its TEMPO; and with considerable success. Due to a more coherent planning period, the literary magazine found its goal early in the year and was able to reach it with a minimum of difficulty.

As in the past, the basis of the staff was Mrs. Rodin's Creative Writing Class; however, an attempt was made to involve a wider spectrum of students particularly in the area of art. The editorial staff found itself considering material from a greater number of authors other than themselves, and they discovered that, with a little effort, they could create wide student appeal without sacrificing quality.

To streamline the production and increase coverage, the LASSO, staffed mainly by inexperienced students in Journalism Class, expanded to eight pages and added two associate editors.

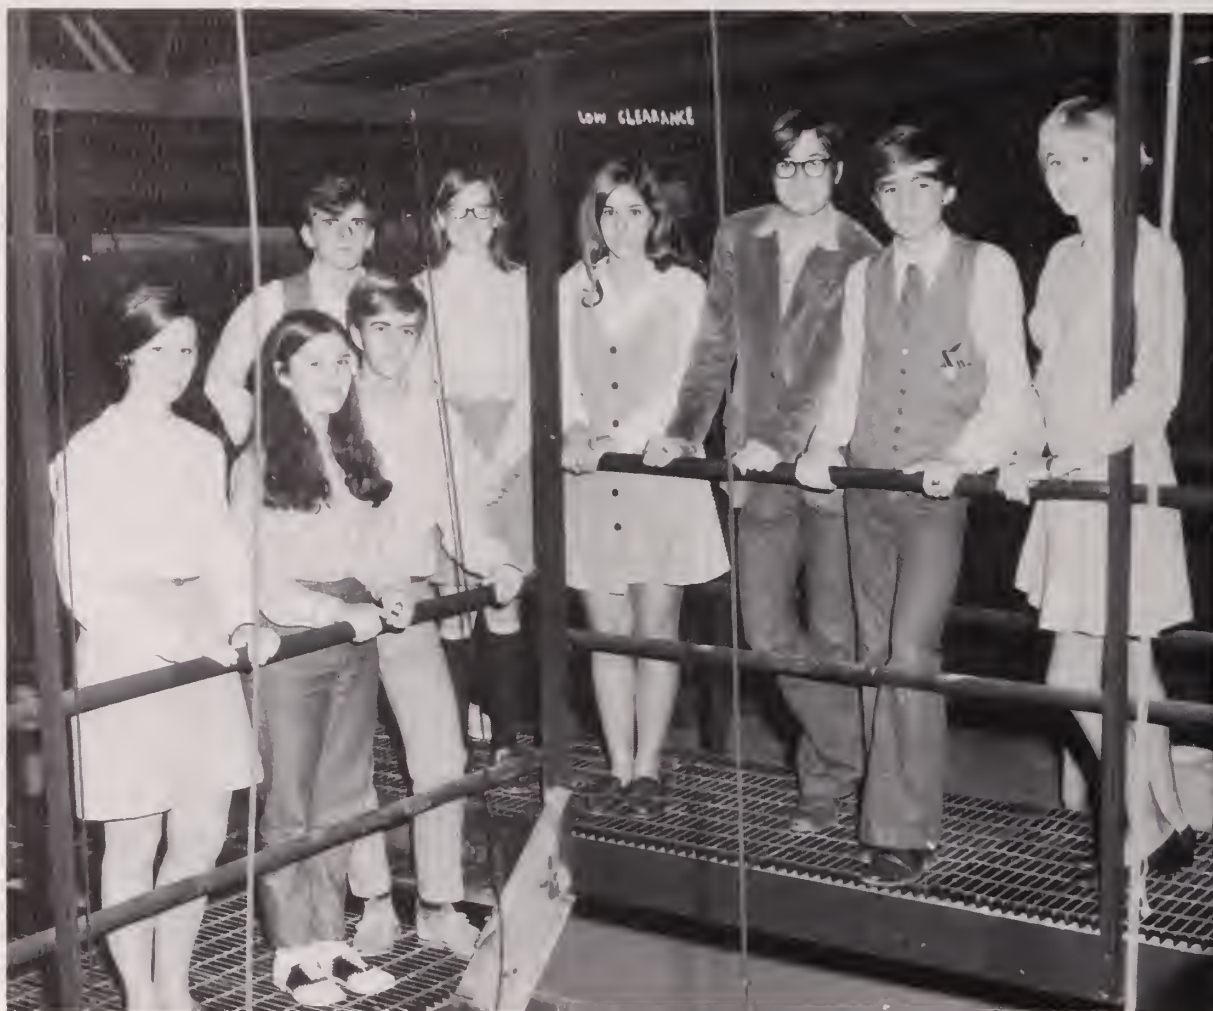

The bi-weekly routine included Tuesday beats, Wednesday assignments, Friday story deadlines and following Wednesday, going to press. The printing class, better known as the George Mason Press, used the new equipment of the print shop to produce more professional issues. This equipment improved picture quality by using metal instead of rubber plates. Even though Miss Neaderhouser was absent most of the first quarter, the staff settled into an efficient routine, managing to meet their deadlines more promptly than in the past. The knowledge gained by some of the staff at the Columbia Press convention in New York City helped to improve the copy and a more effective photography staff turned out higher quality pictures.

To stimulate interest in issues and widen student horizons several regular columns appeared throughout the year. "SCA Markings," "The Harcourt Review," and "Going Events" were always present, with "Both Sides Now," "Bull Feathers" and "Centering In" appearing in alternate issues.

The National Thespian Society is an honor society of those who have given meritorious service to high school dramatics and have demonstrated a competence in that field. Thespian aspirants collect points toward induction (in ninth through twelfth grades) by either working backstage during productions or actually acting. Twenty points are required for induction.

Thespians decided on the yearly production schedule and owing to some confusion about the Drama Club, the Thespians assumed responsibility for all the shows.

Members found themselves working hard early in the year producing "The Hobbit" under the leadership of President Craig Medak.

A Three-Act involving the entire school was performed in February and a One-Act was developed by the Thespians for presentation at the Regional Drama Festival in March.

As the Thespians spiraled to new dramatic heights on the cat walk, "Break a leg" suddenly took on a new meaning.

The Debate Club was an exception to the rule. As one of the few activities allowed night meetings, the Debators faced a difficult time this year. Left with few returning members the club was forced to forge a team from an age and interest spread unusual in such a small group.

This year's topic for league competition, "U.S. Military Intervention," provided the club with a fertile field to research, and research they did. Six months of work went into preparation for the competitions.

Not a well known club, the debators attempted to overcome their public relations problems. Early in the year they sponsored a Marriage Booth at the Carnival. Since then they have made themselves verbally known and should be able to field a larger squad next year.

Junior High Abilities

Dimension, the Junior High version of Tempo was composed of the artistic and literary works of seventh and eighth graders. Students could submit short stories, poems, paragraphs, personal impressions and illustrations, to their English teachers or to Mrs. Lipsner and Mrs. Butterfield, the sponsors. During weekly meetings, Editor Bruce Stanley and the Dimension staff read and compiled these efforts into a magazine which was typed mimeographed, and stapled to the colored paper cover.

This year Dimension added another issue to their production schedule circulating a post-Christmas issue as well as the Spring one.

Social Studies Primes Citizens

The structure of the social studies is changing. No longer will the main concern be with the memorization of dry facts and other such. "Informed citizen" is the term of today and the Social Studies Department strove to produce them this year. Their means was an experimental program modelled on Project Social Studies, a comprehensive curriculum for Kindergarten through Grade 12 by the University of Minnesota.

This new program is an "articulated, interdisciplinary, multi-media program." Simply, this meant that a variety of methods in addition to the traditional lecture approach were used to present a wide variety of topics, from anthropology to sociology. Also stressed was a critical way of gathering and evaluating data. It was hoped that this method of analysis would carry over into the students lives, producing adults capable of intelligent analysis of political situations.

Finally, being a co-ordinated program, the experiment was able to present a larger body of material than ever before by eliminating some of the repetitive instruction that has occurred in the past.

The International Relations Club was basically the same as in past years; however, due to a lack of driving support, the club limited its activities somewhat. The annual fall AFS workday netted a total of $270 and over 95% of the AFS Christmas cards were sold.

In February, George Mason IRC members served as the Delegation from Pakistan to a Model United Nations Exercise held at Georgetown University. Some students served as researchers, advisors and observers, while a chosen few acted as the delegates themselves.

All students involved were required to do in-depth background research and study in the field of International Relations as well as in the specific area of Pakistan relations. This study enabled the participants to resolve the problems presented to the General Assembly. The Pakistani Delegation also served on the Social and Economics Council, a potentially powerful position.

In the spring, the club again attempted to raise the money needed to bring a foreign exchange student to George Mason, again with considerable success.

Wither's Wizards Win Victory

Although the Math Department did not receive a place in the new wing, they did occupy new classroom areas vacated by classes moving to the new facilities. In addition to spreading out, the department numbered nine teachers and enlarged its programs by acquiring seventh and eighth grade remedial materials. The newly rebound orange and blue books disappeared when really new Algebra II-Trig books arrived. For some who remained in the math program, the AP Calculus and Math V Classes continued to offer students an opportunity to exercise their numerical bents.

Coach Casey Withers and her Math Team again made their weight felt in their league. "Wither's Wizards" consistently finished in the upper third of their region, which included all Fairfax County I-A schools. After a win, Dr. Knox paid off and treated members to lunch.

The math season consisted of twelve meets, ten district and two regional; George Mason hosted a regional match. Refreshments after meets rehabilitated tired competitors.

Ph Meter Solves Acid Problems

For the Science Department, this was not a year of radical changes or great expansion, but one of steady progress, allowing for the realization of several long hoped for goals. In the area of life sciences, a shifting emphasis toward ecology led to a fuller exploitation of the streams and woods located on the campus. Back inside, chemistry and physics classes enjoyed the use of the two major equipment acquisitions, a photo-spectrometer and Ph meter. The photo-spectrometer was employed in the study of bonding and assays while the Ph meter allowed students an easy check for their titration results.

Students not only made fuller use of the lab facilities, but sought outside aids as well. Several participated in workshops and seminars given by the Virginia Academy of Science and Georgetown University.

This year has been one of varied activity for the Senior Science Club. Members ranged far a field in their search for knowledge and mixed with other area science buffs in many activities.

Becoming directly involved with other area science clubs, they sent two participants to the Science Club Conference sponsored by the Washington Junior Academy of Science. Four Members attended Georgetown University's Science Symposium. The International Science Fair at Baltimore, Maryland also drew interested students.

Not being a group dedicated to talking and looking only, the club undertook several field projects. Among the most interesting were trips to Washington and Lee and Woodson High Schools to make use of the planetarium facilities and a jaunt to the Tide-water area of Virginia to study an eclipse.

Breaking with a long standing tradition, the Spanish Club and Spanish Honor Society combined activities this year to form a more active group for a more interesting year. Though several trips, meetings, and parties were held together, separate charters were maintained in order to preserve the prestige of Honor Society membership.

The Spanish Honor Society operated a highly successful and profitable Taco concession at the Carnival that gave them ample funds. The annual Christmas Piñata Party was popular as was the trip to the Pan American Union Building in Washington. Taking advantage of the area's Spanish community, the clubs viewed movies at the Ontario Theater — in Spanish.

A guest speaker from Equador proved so successful in the fall that representatives from other Latin countries were invited to speak.

The German Club was off to an early start this year, making up for time lost last year. They plunged into Carnival planning immediately after electing officers. Culinary interests dominated many club activities. Their successful Carnival booth sold German pastry. To celebrate the start of Lent, the club prepared a Fasching feast in the traditional German style. Their appreciation of the good food spurred them to finish the year with dinner at a German restaurant.

The Christmas season brought a flurry of activity in the club. They assembled a bulletin board of German Christmas customs and finished the season by favoring Falls Church with selections from German Christmas Carols.

In the spring the club went on a bicycle trip. Although they could not emulate German youth owing to the lack of hostels and Alps; they suffered the usual international aches and pains.

The French Club and Honor Society worked jointly on several projects this year. The most important of these was their profitable French Pastry booth at Carnival '69. Petits fours and brioches concocted by female members with the help of authentic French recipes from Mrs. Alim, delighted hungry Carnival-goers.

The French Honor Society held early inductions, raising membership to its full quota. The streamlined Constitution eliminated the separate offices of Secretary and Treasurer, combining them into one position. As in past years, the Society ventured to Lisner Auditorium for a French play. This year's attraction was "Huis Clos."

The Club planned to have a Christmas party, and to visit a French Protestant Church which holds services in French.

Art Explores New Media

Owing to the late arrival of supplies, the Art Department was forced to subsist on pure talent alone for the entire first quarter. Despite this setback, several unique projects were undertaken in a variety of new media. Mr. Kline found himself back in his old element as a welding instructor for Art III-IV students. An opportunity to explore photography was also given to students in advanced classes.

These opportunities did not come without effort. The students in the advanced classes had already passed through a rigorous grounding of basic fundamentals. Natural rendering of subjects and the complex relationships between form, color and space as well as art history area was covered in the lower level courses.

Overall, the department is acquiring a more fluid, exploratory posture that bodes well for the future.

The Home Economics Department was kept busy this year with its usual job of educating both boys and girls in the finer points of day to day living. The curriculum covered a wide range of subjects, both theoretical and practical. In sewing, one could make anything from chef's aprons, in the boys' Eighth Grade course, to entire outfits in Advanced Sewing. Cooking was covered quite completely from nutrition and balanced menu planning, to actual preparation of dishes.

Seventh grade girls gained employment opportunities at the completion of the child care and baby-sitting unit, which included real-life simulations with the "sweetie pie" doll. As a reference, each received a card signed by the Home Ec Teacher, Nurse, and Principal.

The Future Homemakers of America got off to a rousing start this year by baking 12 dozen cookies for the Faculty Welcome Tea. At Christmas, the club hosted another tea, again for the faculty.

Demonstrations on bread baking and French cooking were very interesting and enjoyable, as was the trip to VEPCO. Other projects included making flowers for a nursing home, bean bags for the Red Cross, and filling Christmas stockings for the Salvation Army.

Expanded Business Curriculum Offers

In the area of business and vocational education, this was quite a year of expansion. The completion of the new auditorium-classroom complex allowed for total relocation of business classes and an upgrading of both business and industrial arts curricula. New business courses included Data Processing, Stenography and Clerk-Typist. These courses were taught in two hour blocks with the express purpose preparing students for full or part time employment in these areas. Graduates of the Steno and Clerk-Typist programs were prepared to function in a wide range of office positions. Data programming provided manpower to fill key punch and accounting positions. Increased enrollment in Typing I and General Business, the pre-requisite for the new courses, was indicative of an increasing interest in the business world.

To augment regular instruction business minded students got together at meetings of the Business Club. Meetings of this group featured outside speakers and participation in the Washington Gaslight Company's Junior Stockholder Program. Funds were raised at their Bingo Booth at the Carnival.

Electronics, Printing, Drafting

The Industrial Arts are growing. This year has seen the addition of three new high-intensity courses. All three new courses will eventually be expanded to two year series.

Drafting was the shortest of the courses, being taught in two-hour blocks. Though the skills acquired are geared to the placement of students in drafting careers they will be valuable in many other situations as well. Students who show special promise may be placed in jobs without the traditional apprenticeship period.

Both printing and electronics were taught for three hours daily. Printing provided experience in many facets of the field ranging from hand setting of type to photo engraving. Electronics probably gave students the widest variety of skills for use in outside careers. The course covered electronic theory as well as giving students a chance to face practical problems.

from "Pops" to "Gloria"

With the addition of a new practice room and two sound-proof solo rooms the vocal music department was able to maximize talents. Starting early in the year by singing at the dedication of the new auditorium, the choirs performed frequently. Singing at Women's Club meetings, Church Concerts and City Recreation Department parties gave the Senior Choirs a reputation for participating at non-school activities.

The student body was put in a holiday mood at the assemblies before each holiday vacation. The Christmas Assembly included all the choirs and several solos, each from a different part of the auditorium. Evening concerts were also presented for students, parents and interested friends. Notable among these was The Pops Concert consisting of light modern music and the annual Alumni concert in December featuring Vivaldi's "Gloria." A radio program and the Senate Rotunda Easter Observances completed the busy year.

"We accept the charge . . . to foster a greater and continued interest in solo, ensemble, band orchestral, and choral performance. . ." reads the Oath of Tri-M, the music honor society. In addition to going to concerts, studying music appreciation, and giving recitals, the society inducted seven new members and four apprentices.

Bands Expand to Fill Facilities

Under the able direction of Mr. Barr, the bands provided a rippling musical background for a multiplicity of school activities as well as entertaining the community with several concerts of their own. The new wing spawned a new band, the Pit Band, which enriched auditorium activities from a safely concealed location.

Among the band's many performance credits were all the home football games, several away games, the March band festival at Loudoun Valley, the annual Falls Church Memorial Day parade and three concerts in January, March and May. In addition, several outstanding band members participated in the All-Regional Band Solo and Ensemble Festivals.

To handle all of these chores, there were four separate bands ranging from the 'plain old band' to the select Pit Band.

Providing valuable back up assistance for the band were those twirlers the majorettes. Sporting new red and white jump suits, the four majorettes performed at the Homecoming parade, Carnival '69, home football games and several Pep Rallies. The girls also began to wear their uniforms to school on the Friday preceding an athletic event and to home basketball games.

Archery, Golf, Bowling

This was a year of shifting emphasis in Physical Education as the Department was expanded to include a wide range of programs and a new Athletic Director, Coach Siegfried. After school opportunities showed prodigious growth.

First, Archery was revived after a lapse of several years and Golf, a totally new course, was taught in the spring. The Bowling program was carried over from the last two years and again included the option of bowling after school at a public alley. New equipment included tumbling mats and a portable water fountain for the outdoor athletic teams.

The Varsity Girls Softball Team was organized to compete against other girls in the Monument District on the JV Baseball schedule.

Seventh and eighth graders avidly participated in the intramural program. The boys played basketball, assisted by Varsity players last period, and the girls played hockey and volleyball. Volleyball was also available for Junior and Senior girls.

Finally, the coaches looked better than ever, decked out in new red Banlon shirts emblazoned with "George Mason Athletic Department."

for Student Activities

"The SCA is YOUR government," this year even more than in the past. A major reorientation stressed involvement and benefit for more students than ever before.

To effect this change, committee chairmen were selected not only on the basis of a specific skill but with an eye toward giving the council a broad opinion base.

Council work began early in the summer. The first major thrust, aside from the record-breaking Carnival, was the revision of the dress code.

Again the publication of a handbook-student directory was undertaken, and its arrival, though late, was heralded as a major victory.

SCA members were ultimately and directly involved with community activities. They were represented on the Falls Church Drug Abuse Council and on YAC.

Possibly the most exciting of the SCA's undertakings was planning the Experiment in Free-Form Education (EFFE), a three day exercise in March during which the curriculum was altered to give students a chance to participate in seminars covering subject areas of their own choosing.

The annual Electives Fair was revised along the lines of Back-to-School Night, with the demonstrations being given in various rooms and the guests free to move about at will.

In addition to all its special and unusual activities, the SCA undertook the day to day running of student government with a surface smoothness that belied the enormous amount of work that went on under the surface.

SCA Tackles Dress Code

Virtual abolition of the dress code was the ultimate outcome of an effort at revision undertaken by a joint Student-Faculty Committee. The problems of changing modes of dress were researched by the committee through the administration of a survey to students, faculty and parents. The survey results were reported to the School Board and led to the adoption of a temporary code. Finally, the question of pants on girls led to the replacement of a formal code by broad outlines concerning taste and cleanliness.

During this year of upheaval "revolutionary" trends attacked even the old standfast National Honor Society. Accordingly, the traditional guest induction speakers were eliminated and the four student speakers changed their styles. Letters from the society to students making the honor roll were reinstated this year to give students more of an incentive to strive for academic excellence, as well as to commend them.

Inductees kindle flames of Character, Leadership, Scholarship, and Service.

Future Teachers Return To Elementary

Judging from their performance this year, the Future Teachers of America should be credits to their chosen profession. Under the guidance of Sponsor Mr. Scott and President Janine Chevalier they participated in a wide range of practical projects that included teaching in the elementary schools, a tutoring system, and Project Touch.

Their meetings were a forum for speakers from the Teacher Corps, the Peace Corps and Project Headstart.

On the social side, they sponsored a Teacher Tea in August, sold refreshments at Back-to-School-Night and sponsored parties for children in Project Touch and Head Start.

Teachers enjoy faculty teas given by the Future Teachers.

President Barbara Charlesworth contemplates club activities.

More than just a service club, the Future Nurses of America used their service as a practical prelude to study and a career in nursing. The club's activities this year certainly reflected their aims as well as being valuable assets to the community. Work was done with retarded and crippled children as well as in a nursing home.

To provide needed relaxation as well as monetary help, the club staged a cake walk at Carnival '69.

Flushed by their car rally success, the Key Club came back this year to repeat their triumph. Not so fortunate in other fun endeavors they lost their football game with the Marshall Key Clubbers 30-0.

Primarily a service organization, the club marched for ALSAC and UNICEF, collecting $264 in a combined effort with the Keyettes. Key Club participation in Project Touch provided an excellent service for underprivileged children in the area.

A policy change from last year allowed for the acceptance of freshmen and prompted a second induction.

Enthusiastic response is given at a Key Club meeting.

Half Year Terms Initiated

Keyettes exhibit mechanical aptitude with the snow cone machine.

The aims of the Keyette Club are four fold: to develop initiative and leadership, to provide common work experience, to serve school and community, and to cooperate with the school principal. In the past year they have without doubt lived up to all of these lofty aspirations.

Not a group to procrastinate, the club's activities began last July with a slumber party that yielded 32 dresses for Vietnamese orphans. Too numerous to recount fully, the rest of the year's activities included work on Project Touch, marches for ALSAC, UNICEF, and Dimes, ushering at various school activities, and an Easter party for the children at the CP Center.

A note of special importance was the appointment by the President of Keyette International of Susie Ames as International Project Chairman.

A change from past years, all officers with the exception of President and Class Representatives were elected for half year terms, in February and May. New member inductions were held as usual in September and February.

Formerly Tri-Hi-Y, the Cadence Club assumed its new name as the result of a massive reorganization effort. More school oriented than in the past, the club sponsored two membership drives and operated with a much expanded roster.

Despite its new direction, the club experienced some difficulty in translating its aims into action. The sale of large beautiful paper flowers at Carnival '68 was undoubtedly the most popular and profitable project undertaken by the club.

Homecoming festivities divert the attention of the white clad Pom-Pom girls.

New this year, the Drill Team expanded from the eight member base during football to include a flock of seventh through ninth grade girls for the rest of the year.

The original eight were presented at the home Woodbridge football game and performed at several following games including Homecoming. Their uniforms and pom-poms were all homemade.

A second set of tryouts followed the close of football season increasing the number of girls to twenty two. The routines performed by these girls were results of the creative efforts of the team members.

Pep Club Gets Student

Armed with pledge and charter the Pep Club set out to instill that magic quality, Pep, in the student body. Despite complex organization and an avalanche of activities, the student body's response was somewhat disappointing. Their mammoth "Mustangs Have the Power" banner became a legend in its own time. Activities reached a fever pitch during the week before Homecoming when the club sponsored dummies, spirit chains, sticks, and signs, sneaky sneakers, winks and waves. For Homecoming itself the Pep Clubbers decorated the bleachers, presented mums for various girls involved with the days activities and presented a football necklace to the Queen.

In the week to week battle for spirit individual club members took care of their "adopted" athletes, while the club as a whole provided schedules and posters to prompt the students. As a fitting capstone for their labors, the club bought a commemorative plaque and sent thank you notes to the athletes.

Monogrammer Andy Schwind helps the Pep Club Homecoming Chain reach new heights.

During the past year the Monogram Club has gone efficiently about its business of providing an image of the athlete as something more than a sports machine. An honorary organization, for which all lettermen become eligible, but into which they are not necessarily inducted, the club provided both service and entertainment.

The annual Back-to-School night traffic jam was unravelled by competent Monogram car parkers. During the new wing dedication club members were again pressed into service parking cars as well as guiding people through the new facilities.

Spring brought the Spring Sports Banquet, again Monogram planned and executed.

Cheerleaders Alter Format

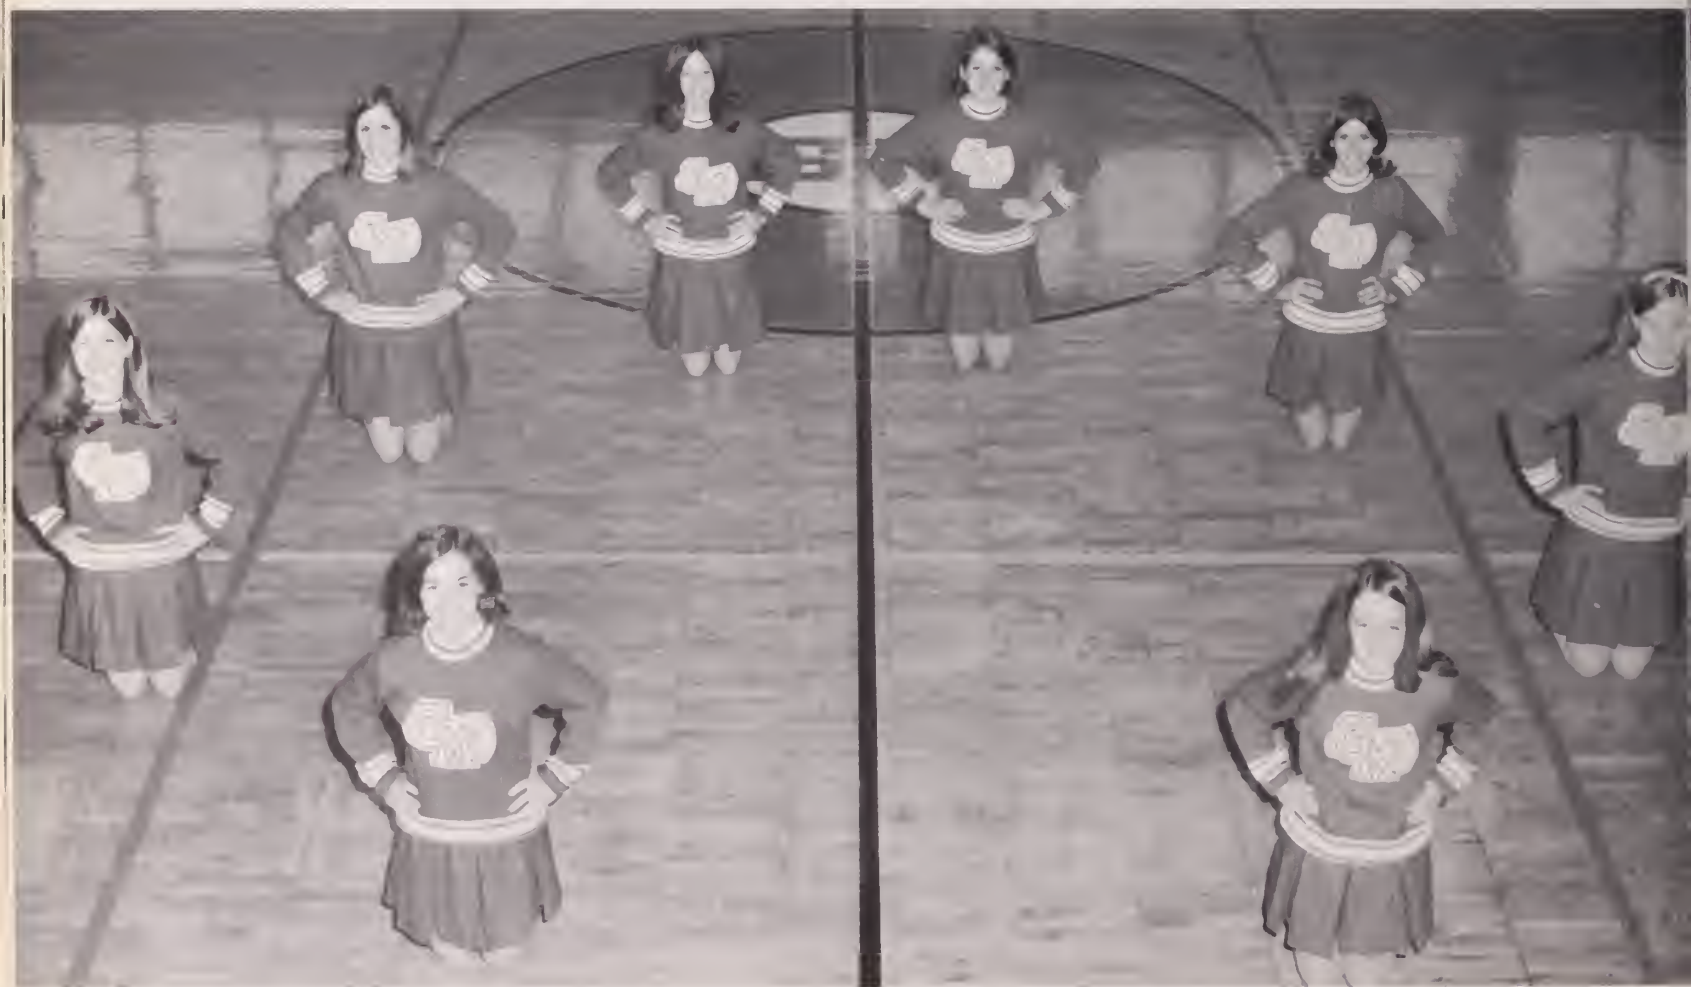

The Cheerleaders attempted to revise some of their traditions this year. With a majority of experienced girls returning, less time had to be taken teaching cheers, allowing both JV and Varsity summer practices to produce new chants, sidelines and cheers. Five girls went to one of the several national cheerleading camps. Here they were able to adopt a more stylized manner of cheering which greatly improved the squads' quality and the crowd's response. Many of the old familiar chants were revised and the new "Ah, Beep, Beep," became a favorite.

To add to their appearance the girls maintained the eight member Varsity and JV squads which were originated last year. Both squads purchased new wool uniforms in more modern styles and the Varsity adopted white turtlenecks. The 'shedding' pom-poms of last year were replaced with the more stable hand-made crepe-paper ones.

The Cheerleading image blurred slightly as group identities became less important and the girl's strove to develop as individuals. The constitution was revised and liberalized to lessen restrictions in the girls' social lives and give Cheerleaders the opportunity to function outside their stereotype.

Experience, Exuberance Push

Practice makes perfect. This year's MUSTANG staff was bolstered by an abundance of experience and exuberance to the result that dead lines were met, and more time could be given to actually working on the book as opposed to "learning the ropes." The photography staff was an exception. The presence of an increased number of people was sometimes offset by a decrease in familiarity with equipment, but hard work and sweat usually managed to get the job done . . . eventually.

Major changes in the book's organization were the dropping of the Sports and Features Sections with those activities covered in a student activities section. Another policy change involved the combination of the headline and copy sections under one editor. Otherwise things remained much as they have been in the past. As always, editors outnumbered staffers by about two to one.

Despite this year's success, the outlook for the future is somewhat dimmed by the dominance of graduating Seniors on the Staff.

SENIORS

The Senior Class

On entering George Mason the class of '70 was confronted by Goldwater-Johnson posters soon rivaled by first class officer campaign promises of Coke in the water fountains and free ice cream. Alternating Science with Home Ec. or Shop, class members claimed wooded land surrounding the then non-existent football field and observed nature amid the mud and poison ivy.

In Eighth Grade, athletic redistricting left George Mason in IB competition. Students became involved as the Football team placed second in District, and cheered "We're Number One" during basketball. The day ended at 2:30 for some, at 3:00 for those in language. Everyone was an intellectual as the Eighth Grade dominated the honor roll.

Freshman year began with a little excitement, along with SCA doughnuts, when one morning an army helicopter was discovered resting on the practice field. Going to basketball games meant going to dances afterwards; "Detour" was the first attempt at producing such a sockhop. BSCS biologists staked another plot by the now existent football field.

In '68 Sophomores were integral parts of clubs, publications, and SCA. The active class agenda set precedents: Sophomore Sucker Day, "Up, Up and Away", the first Sophomore Christmas Dance, and Clarence Clean-Up. After redistricting again the basketball teams moved into the Monument District. The last year of the two-year modular system allowed everyone a little free time to congregate in the halls and watch the devastation of the hill for the new wing. The student square was almost completed.

Junior year was another election year and as the country inaugurated Nixon, the class began its first year under Kinsley. Super class organization produced a spaghetti dinner, a sweetheart dance with a real fountain, a controversial Variety Show and a "Midsummers Night's Dream" New concepts were introduced with the quarterly English changes and phrases like "creative problem solving" and "funtional fixity" crept into the common vocabulary. Most of the class ended the year on TV reliving Black Voices, Decision and Dissent or Film.

The Morse machine defeated the Free School Party and the class of '70 moved into that decade. The only class with complete independent study, Seniors roamed the halls planning carnival, Homecoming or selecting announcements. Athletic competition seemed plagued by insurmountable injuries. ARA provided welcome relief from 11 years of cafeteria food. Seniors became cafeteria experts since the campus was not completely "open".

Graduation on a Saturday morning in the new auditorium set another precedent. Seniors wondered how much of their influence would affect George Mason in the '70's.

Two AFS Students

Experience American System

George Mason's two AFS students, Hiroyuki Yagi and Danilo Garcia, pause in the library at an appropriate place.

Each year George Mason's AFS Chapter host a Senior foreign exchange student. This year there were two: Danilo Garcia from Costa Rica, and Hiroyuki Yagi from Tokyo, Japan.

Each boy became involved in school activities early in the year. An active member of the Varsity Soccer Team, Danilo displayed the skill that years of practice in one of his country's important sports had given him.

Hiroyuki—Yuki—for short impressed the entire school with his musical abilities at the Christmas concert by singing a Japanese protest song to his own accompaniment.

Both boys were quiet and yet quickly acquired friends with their pleasant personalities, and were a vital part of the school life.

UNDERCLASS

The class of '71 faced, as have most Junior classes, the financial problems of staging the traditional Prom which ends the year. When the Carnival became the year's major scheduled money-making project for classes and clubs, the Juniors were faced with the necessity of careful planning for their year's activities.

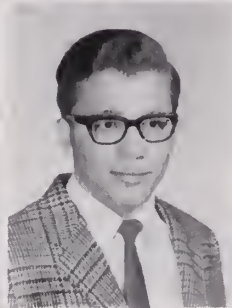

During the summer the Juniors sponsored several bakesales, profiting $65. To lighten their financial responsibilities the class soon cut the traditional Spaghetti Dinner and gave the Sophomores the Sweetheart Dance to experiment with.

The Zoo Dip, White Elephant Sale, Paint Twirl and the popular Car Smash were the class's Carnival booths. Junior confidence increased as the treasury increased when the class profited the largest total sum, ($416) of any represented organization. The class had made it halfway to their proposed Prom budget of $1000 by mid-October.

Individual talents in art, dramatics and music marked the class's achievements. The new vocational programs were patterned around a large junior enrollment and were designed to involve class members in two-year programs. Experience in dramatic productions was an asset to the first Junior class to stage the Junior Variety show in the auditorium. The show in March was the source of the remaining Prom finances.

The search for a Prom site led Juniors to a variety of possible rooms. Deciding against the traditional motel sites, the class aimed early in the year for the Tysons Corners Shopping Mall as the tentative Prom location.

The largest class in school, the Class of '72, was definitely established in the Senior High as they were seated with the Juniors and Seniors in the new auditorium.

The class set an underclass precedent by publishing their own directory early in the year. Sophomores were also rapidly drafted into Senior High activities, making important contributions to the Varsity Soccer and Varsity Football teams particularly after first string injuries required JV replacements. Girls also got into sports as a majority of the victorious Sophomore-Junior powderpuff team was Sophomore girls.

Sophomores in their effort to organize planned three Carnival Booths: Card Darts, Ring Toss and Skee Ball. The income was not as high as had been expected though due to the cost of the purchased prizes. Sophomores then planned an Ugly Man Contest to supplement their income.

Class meetings re-appeared on the Sophomore schedule. This was a forgotten experience for some whose last meeting had been in Seventh Grade. With the help of Mark Hanak's frequent surveys, Sophomores voted on accepting the Sweetheart Dance from the Juniors. Due to the unfavorable past results of some semi-formal dances the class changed it to a Heel-and-Tie dance.

The experience that class members gained in a variety of areas will prove valuable for their Junior year.

Feeling somehow more mature, the Freshmen bid goodbye to the Junior High wing and plunged into the Senior High with a will.

They planned to give a Christmas sock hop and present a George Mason flag to the school. Since the classes' Goldfish Throw, Magic Ducks and Bean Bag Toss booths at Carnival '69 did not bring in enough money for the entire year's activities, they elected to sell tootsie rolls and wash cars to finance their flag.

The all-girl officers distributed valentines and sold guesses for the Groundhog Identity Contest.

The ascendance to high school brought more active participation from the class. Class members played Powder Puff football and cleaned up after football games. They made an effort to 'Keep Our City Clean' through a class project to pick up litter along Broad Street. Freshmen participated in a wide range of activities, notably dramatics productions and SCA committees.

From the first day of school, when Freshmen guides showed new students where to go, the class of '73 has been an active and successful part of George Mason.

Eighth Grade

The Class of '74 returned in the fall to realize that they were no longer the youngest class in school.

The first class activity consisted of welcoming the incoming seventh graders and being old hands at such complexities as locker combinations, gym suits and changing classes.

The year's first class meeting was devoted to discussion concerning the proposed Carnival booth. The artistic abilities of class members were recognized early when the home made arts and crafts for the Psycho Shop, donated by eighth graders, sold out.

Eighth grade girls became involved in athletic and extracurricular activities. Girls excelled in intramural soccer, basketball and musical performances, and on the Drill team. Boys added to both the JV Football and Basketball, showing promise for future teams. Boys and girls increased rooting sections as they began to fit more into the routine.

Jointly with the seventh grade the class had several of the famed Junior High 'record' dances, and a field day in the spring.

Seventh Grade

The Class of '75 entered GM with great expectations of the new freedom that high school provides. The experience of having a private locker and changing classes every hour was an exciting change from elementary school.

The enthusiasm of the seventh grade became immediately obvious with the class's first officer elections. So many students were interested in running for office it was necessary to have the school's first election primary to reduce the number of candidates to two per office. The final election was close, particularly for the office of president.

Election partisanship however did not keep the class from uniting to put on three successful carnival booths. Win-a-Draw,

Fortune Telling, and Record Request booths were the seventh grade's first attempt by the class as a working whole.

New opportunities were opened to seventh graders this year. The drill team and pom-pom girls gave Jr. High girls the chance to actively show their spirit. Many in the class participated in the years first dramatic production "The Hobbit", gaining valuable experience.

Intramural sports involved seventh grade boys and girls in soccer, football, and basketball, and the seventh grade influence in Pep Club was obvious at both home and away games. A spring track-field day, along with several class parties and dances finished out the year.

Gift of youth.

This gift was embodied in a mythical ring belonging to a hero, Ogier the Dane. Ogier's ring not only removed the wearer's infirmities; it also restored his youth. Try your Balfour class ring 50 years from now. Maybe it can do the same.
